DID YOU KNOW? TSA has trained more than 1,000 canine teams to work at airports and mass-transit facilities across the country. There are two types of explosives detection canines used by the TSA. Conventional explosives detection canines are trained to detect explosive odor in stationary objects, such as vehicles and baggage. Passenger screening canines receive extra training to detect explosives odor carried by people. Although TSA's canine partners are sociable, they are working dogs and should only be touched and fed by their handlers.
